Multimodal Freight

As logistics has come to influence business strategies, shippers emphasize the flexibility and frequency that is offered by road haulage. If other modes of transport (such as air and sea) are to compete with road haulage, they must offer flexible and frequent services as well. This flexibility is obtained by offering multimodal transport services involving pick up and timely delivery by truck at each end of the long haul. In order to determine the frequency required for a multimodal freight transport service to be competitive to road haulage. Maroos can provide a service that is sufficiently frequent.
